FOOD BANK ASSESSES NEED, RESPONDS TO TORNADO IN EASTERN NORTH CAROLINA

GREENVILLE – Every day, The Food Bank of Central & Eastern North Carolina responds to a crisis in its service area - hunger. The Food Bank serves as a conduit for accepting, sorting, packaging, storing, and distributing food and non-food essentials to more than 500,000 people at risk of hunger daily in its 34-county service area. As a first responder during times of a natural disaster, the Food Bank also reacts immediately to serve victims of tornadoes, hurricanes and floods throughout the southeast without disrupting regular food distribution in North Carolina. Following the tornadoes hitting North Carolina over the weekend, the Food Bank assessed its partner agencies (food pantries, rescue missions, soup kitchens, senior and child nutrition programs) in counties affected by the storm to determine how their distribution capabilities fared.

The Food Bank has been in communication with the American Red Cross and North Carolina Voluntary Organizations Active in Disaster (NCVOAD). The organization has reached out to assist sister food banks in Elizabeth City, which serves Bertie County and in Fayetteville, which serves a portion of the Sandhills along with the Food Bank branch there. As a result of the initial assessment, Food Bank agencies in Greene, Onslow, Lee, and Wake counties were hardest hit. The organization is sending additional resources to the agencies affected by the powerful tornadoes on Saturday, April 16; have extended hours for these organizations to shop for additional items and is making special deliveries directly to agencies affected.

"Our thoughts go out to the many families affected by the recent storm. We are grateful that our warehouses in the affected areas are operational and we are making sure that our partner agencies can operate or return to full service as soon as possible to continue providing relief to those who are struggling," said Peter Werbicki, President/CEO at the Food Bank of Central & Eastern North Carolina.

So far the Food Bank's relief efforts in eastern North Carolina include:

- Eight pallets of produce, orange juice, water, dairy and bread from our Greenville Branch to a partner agency in Greene County.
- Deliveries are scheduled for Thursday, April 21, 2011 to another Greene County partner agency and also a single-load drop to a hard-hit agency in Jacksonville.
- Another partner agency from Jacksonville will pick up a double load Thursday from the New Bern Branch.

The Food Bank expects to see the need for emergency food to increase over the coming weeks as displaced families seek precious resources. Food donations to the Food Bank will help provide emergency and increased assistance to Food Bank partner agencies. Food donations will be accepted at Food Bank warehouses in Durham, Raleigh, New Bern, Greenville, Southern Pines and Wilmington. Donate by going to www.foodbankcenc.org or text "40meals" to 50555.

Most needed items for Disaster Relief are:

- Pop-top canned foods like soups and ravioli, spaghetti
- Paper goods and products (paper towels, paper plates/cups/napkins, plastic utensils)
- Diapers
- Hygiene products/toiletries (Shampoo/soap/toothpaste/toothbrushes/hand sanitizer, etc.)
- Other single serving meals that do not require refrigeration or cooking/meals ready to eat
- Single serving snacks
- Peanut butter
- Cleaning supplies (wipes preferred)

Onslow County suffered major devastation in the Piney Greene Area as well as on Base with two separate trailer park divisions, on opposite sides of town, totally destroyed. The Tarawa Terrace Base Housing suffered major damages while over 100 homes were either partially damaged or totally destroyed. The Salvation Army of Jacksonville, a Food Bank partner agency, is offering the residents food boxes and also vouchers to use at the local drug store.

In the Food Bank's Greenville Branch service area, one Greene County agency hit by the tornado also has an increased need for emergency food and non-food items.

Lee County, one of the hardest hit areas in North Carolina by Saturday's powerful storm, is served out of the Food Bank's Sandhills Branch. With one of the agencies serving as a designated day shelter for kids as a result of the storm, additional food donations will help meet the increased demands on their services. (Produce...)

Wake County saw unprecedented devastation due to Saturday's storm and many Wake County agencies served out of the Food Bank's main warehouse on Tarheel Drive in Raleigh have a high anticipation of increased need and are already supporting large numbers of individuals and families who are without power. Some of the agencies themselves are without power but still operating and still distributing to those who need assistance, even taking to the streets, supporting a trailer park community by distributing flyers to families with information of additional hours of distribution today.

The Food Bank of Central & Eastern North Carolina has a long history of responding to natural disasters in eastern North Carolina.

- In 1998, the Food Bank distributed nearly 300,000 pounds of food and relief supplies to emergency operation centers to our sister food bank in the east, the Food Bank of the Albemarle in the aftermath of Hurricane Bonnie.
- In 1999, when Hurricane Floyd devastated eastern North Carolina, the Food Bank disributed more than 5 million in disaster relief to partner agencies and other agencies due to Hurricane Floyd. The Greenville Branch was opened as a result of the relationships built and the continued need in the area.
